Dear authors,

I hope this email finds you well. I would like to thank you for submitting your manuscript to our international public health journal. After a thorough analysis, we would like to provide you with some guidance to improve the quality of your article. We believe that implementing these suggestions will significantly enhance the chances of acceptance and impact of your work.

1. Title:

It is important to make the title more appealing and attractive in order to maximize reach and citation potential. We recommend highlighting the main finding of your study as a viable outcome. Additionally, using questions in the title can pique readers' interest. In the current title, we noticed some imprecision and an excessive emphasis on methodological aspects. We suggest removing these aspects and focusing on the originality of your research. Remember that the title and abstract should be more specific, even when addressing specific issues, to attract a broader audience in the field of public health/global health.

2. Introduction:

Improve the writing and cohesion of ideas throughout the text, avoiding abrupt transitions. Avoid excessive use of acronyms, as they can clutter the text. It is essential to present current epidemiological data that reinforce the epidemiological framework of the problem being addressed. Contextualize your problem within the global public health context and the global priority agenda. Furthermore, it is necessary to identify and present the knowledge gap that your study aims to fill. We recommend conducting a systematic search or referencing a current review (integrative or systematic) to support this knowledge gap.

3. Objective:

Ensure that the objective is identical in the abstract and manuscript, surpassing methodological steps. Avoid the use of acronyms in the objective and write it in a clear and precise manner, without excessive focus on the method.

4. Results:

The presentation of the results needs improvement in terms of aesthetics. We observed that the tables are poorly presented, and lack sufficient explanations. We recommend revising and reorganizing them, ensuring that they are visually appealing and self-explanatory.

5. Discussion:

Currently, the discussion in your article is descriptive and lacks an analytical approach. It is important to establish a dialogue between the empirical data and the concepts discussed in the literature. Avoid simply repeating what has already been addressed. We recommend enhancing this section by exploring the implications of your results and providing a critical analysis.

6. Conclusion:

The current conclusion is too generic and does not sufficiently justify the publication of your work. The conclusion should address the established objectives, be written in the first person, and express the researchers' perspective on the findings. Avoid mere repetition of the results, as seen in the current format. Highlight how your work contributes and why it is relevant.

Thank you for considering these suggestions for the revision of your manuscript. We look forward to receiving the improved version of your article.

Now I understand your question.

I sent the request to the treasury to check if you have both payments in your name and if there is a possibility of a refund. Have you already challenged the second payment with the bank?
